主題：Conjoined Twins: A Fascinating Story

講員：陳友珍 醫師

Conjoined twins are incompletely separated monozygotic twins. They have long fascinated both medical profession and lay public.

Such events are rare and occur in 1/50,000 to 1/100,000 births and 1 in 400 sets of monozygotic twins. Over 60% succumb in utero or are stillborn. It is a complication of monochorionic twinning at 13–15 days after conception. In addition to humans, the conjoined twins can occur among living species, such as plants, turtles, and pigs. Twins can be conjoined at any site from the cranium downward to the sacrococcygeal region.

The presence of conjoined twins always generates many ethical questions. The decision for surgical separation can put the twins in life danger, leading to a more conservative approach.

Continue

The objective of the separation of conjoined twins is to make the fetuses free individuals, with the possibility of independent existence, with individual choices. The well-being of each twin should be sought independently, without causing harm to any of them. Any risk of morbidity and mortality to one of the twins must be communicated to parents and the decision is up to them to decide whether or not to perform the separation surgery.

Dr. Harold Chen received M.S. degree (1967) in Human Genetics from the University of Michigan Graduate School in Ann Arbor, Michigan. He published over 100 papers in peer-reviewed journals, over a dozen of chapters, and 3 books, including Atlas of Genetic Diagnosis and Counseling, by Springer publisher, 2nd Edition, 2012, 3 Volumes.
